INVISIBLE MENACE-GLASS DOORS

The newest menace on the home accident scene is the sliding glass door - the kind that stretches from floor to ceiling and usually opens to the backyard or patio.

Last year over 150,000 people were injured when they walked into doors they thought were open. Report after report tells of lost eyes, cut tendons, disfigured faces and severed arteries . . . all from flying glass.

One of the problems here is that a great majority of the glass in these doors is flimsy - often, not much stronger than ordinary window pane. But there are some solutions recommended by the National Safety Council:

Decorate your glass door with a decal or sandblasted - type design to alert people when the door is closed. A foolproof precaution, however, is to install a door made of shatter-proof safety glass which doesn't cost too much more than ordinary glass. But whatever the cost difference, it's worth it.

Dalton To Support President Ford

When I accented election as a delegate to the Republican National Convention, I realized that I might be faced with a crucial choice. I knew that I could easily find myself in a position of far greater sensitivity than normally attaches a single vote out of the 1,130 needed to nominate. That has proved to be the case.

The Democrats, at their recently-concluded convention, provided me and all Americans with strong incentive to support a Republican who can be elected this fall. When the cloak of mystery surrounding the political philosophy of the Democratic presidential nominee was finally partially removed, it became abundantly clear--from the platform adopted with his approval and from his selection of a vice presidential running mate that Jimmy Carter represents the same brand of poorly conceived and misguided liberalism which was espoused by Senator McGovern in 1972 and soundly rejected by the voters.

I have therefore, given most careful consideration to the decision of whether I should support President Ford or Governor Reagan to oppose the Democratic nominee. I can frankly say that I could support either of these men with pride and enthusiasm.

In formulating my decision, I have talked literally to hundreds of my fellow Virginians. I have also evaluated all information available to me in order to determine which of the two Republican contenders would make the strongest candidate for our party if nominated and the strongest leader for America if elected.

I have come to a conclusion. I will cast my delegate vote in Kansas City for the nomination of President Ford. It is my conviction that he has served this country well since assuming the mantle of national leadership. It is my further belief that he offers our party its best chance of success at the polls in November.

It is my hope that President Ford and Governor Regan will reach an accord in Kansas City so that the Republicans can field a Ford-Regan ticket in the forthcoming campaign. This would provide us with the leadership and the necessary unity of purpose to convince the people of this country that the soundest national direction for the next four years will be provided by the Republican Party.

FOOD SHOPPER

By Susan K. Simpson
Va. Dept. of Agriculture & Commerce

Here's a real canning and freezing information bonanza! If you're into the business of food preservation, you have quite an investment, both from a money and a time stand-point. So, why not go the full route and invest a little bit in knowledge, too.

The common response when referring to canning and freezing procedures is that "I've done it such and such a way for years with no problems." Well, as with life, times change and there are needed and better recommendations for a perhaps better and/or perhaps safer canned or frozen product.

Varieties of food products such as tomatoes or green beans change with the years. As with tomatoes, the acidity level in some varieties is less requiring the addition of small amounts of acid such as lemon juice or citric acid. The acidity prevents bacterial growth. With green beans, another popular garden favorite, a pressure canner must be used to assure a safe home canned product.

The yield of a product is also an important factor. Without knowing the approximate yield, there's no real way to judge the amount of equipment needed.

To all these ends, there are several publications available free of charge. First, there is "10 Short Lessons in Canning and Freezing", an excellent publication for the novice food preserver. "Guide to Home Canning and Freezing . . . Instructions and Recipes" provides more in-depth guidelines concerning procedures. "Capture the Natural Taste" is a reference chart concernign approximate yields for popular fruits and vegetables, and a "Ready Reference Chart" offers information concerning volume and weight equivalents, approximate yields and processing times for pressure canner use.

For your free copies of these four publications, address your request on a postcard to - - - "Canning", Va. Dept. of Agriculture and Commerce, P. O. Box 1163, Richmond, Va. 23209.

Capitol Comments

By Dan Daniel

WASHINGTON - From the period July 2 to July 19, your Congressman moved his base of operations from the Nation's Capitol to Southside Virginia. It was a welcome move, even though it was not a period of idleness. It was not all work, however. I played four rounds of golf with my usual inconsistent scores from 77 to 89.

Sunday, July 4, turned out to be other than a day of rest for your Congressman. At 6:30 a. m., six busloads of young people departed Danville to participate in the all-day program on the Mall and the Ellipse in Washington, and I was there to see them off. I urged them, as I do all such visitors to the Federal City, to enjoy the beauty of the place, to recognize the importance of government, and finally, not to judge all elected officials by the actions of a few. The participation of this group of over 200 choral and band students was made possible by the efforts of the Community Relations Team at the local C & P Telephone office, and it was indeed a fine example of community effort.

At 11:00 a. m., I participated in special services at my home Church, then drove to Chatham to read the text of the Declaration of Independence from the steps of Hargrave Military Academy. This followed, but was not a part of, a special multi - denominational service in the Hargrave Chapel. After wearing the apparel of 200 years ago for this event, I can well understand our forefathers' hurry-up attitude to move West. Boots and buckskins must have been considerably more comfortable.

On Monday, the 5th, I participated in Stuart's Bicentennial Parade as Grand Marshal. For enthusiasm and good feeling, it rivaled anything reported by the news media anywhere else in this country.

On Friday, July 16, I took part in the Hurt Bicentennial Banquet and in other affairs scheduled for the day. I cannot let the opportunity pass to report that the people of Pittsylvania County have gone all-out in providing a summer-long festival, and the hours of effort which have gone into this are obvious to the visitor.

During the two-week period, workshops were held, and in addition a number of people stopped by the District office.

Unlike most periods when I am conducting workshops, these covered the period when one of the national political parties was conducting its nominating convention. Obviously, that was one of the chief topics of conversation. People who discussed it appeared to be about equally divided on the qualifications of those who were under consideration. This surprised me somewhat, since in years passed there has been generally more unanimity on the part of the voters at this stage than there appears to be in this election year.

Other than politics, discussions centered on many of the same topics discussed at prior workshops, but with some additional problems being reported as well.

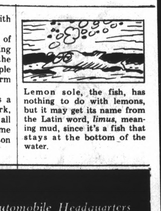
A number of people in the District have expressed concern - and in some cases, disgust - over a so-called hymn which appears in the revised Armed Forces Hymnal. When we first learned of this, a group of Congressmen, including your own, contacted the Armed Forces Chaplains Board, and were provided what we feel is a wholly inadequate response. We intend to pursue this with the Secretary of Defense, if need be. An individual's choice of doctrine is a highly personal matter, but "It Was On A Friday Morning" reflects nothing but negativism. Last week the Veterans Administration ordered this song removed from hymnals it is using, and I believe the same actic should be taken by the Department of Defense.

Despite numerous pledges from Washington to the contrary, there has been no letup in the demand for more and more information, to be provided by the individual to the bureaucracy. A great deal of disappointment was expressed in this regard, along with a feeling of dismay that while everybody condemned the procedure, no one seemed to be doing anything about it. I did remind many that several recent bills which have passed the House have incorporated language to provide for Congressional disapproval of regulations published in the Federal Register. Those of us who support this procedure are hopeful it will be forcefully implemented.

Additional reports were received of manipulation of the rules governing the multitude of welfare-related programs to secure maximum benefits with minimum productive effort.

An increasing number of migrant workers are being employed in some areas of the District, because local people cannot or will not accept farm work.

In summary, then, it was a 17-day period of some work, and some relaxation. In all respects, it was a welcome respite from the Washington routine.



Lemon sole, the fish, has nothing to do with lemons, but it may get its name from the Latin word, limus, meaning mud, since it's a fish that stays at the bottom of the water.
